

NEW YORK

PURVI PADIA

Purvi Padia is a New York-based interior designer whose personal style can be seen on all her creations. "I love casual-chic with modern and vintage accents," she tells us. "I don't wear a ton of color, but I am a huge fan of texture—leather, suede, lace, silk and fur."

Living in such a vibrant city with her two children (Rehan, 5, and Reven, 1), Padia appreciates all the culturally diverse opportunities that the city offers. "I love that my kids are getting to experience such a variety of cultures at a young age," she says. "The idea that my son is learning Chinese in school at the age of five is so inspiring!"

Bubby's

What started in the 1990s as a pie company has since evolved into a bustling brunch spot, fixated on its mission to "defend the American table." Simple recipes and local ingredients abound at both locations in Tribeca and Dumbo. Diners can supplement Bubby's signature pastries with roasted vegetable chili, salmon nicoise salad and—on a slightly more indulgent note—sourdough pancakes and bacon-wrapped meatloaf.

Jacadi's fine selection of clothes couldn't be more adorable and timeless. When most childrenswear opts for loud, trendy colors and prints, this French brand stays classic but nonetheless au courant. The detailing is exquisite, the fit is sublime and the fabric is the best of the best. Their cozy cashmere sweaters and comfortable corduroy pants will make great additions to your kid's wardrobe, and will have them wishing that such items could grow with them.
